SUGGESTED ANSWER

If her grandmother had entered the girls' room, she would have put on her glasses and without touching with her finger the wardrobe or the little tables beside the walnut beds, she would have seen that there was not a speck of dust anywhere, nor any flies, and she would have sighed lightheartedly; she would have sensed the smell of waxed floors and the cool fragrance specific to the restful old houses where apples and quinces winter, and she would have shaken her head in kindness and tenderness.
